Fukushima Keido (right), head of the Tofuku Temple in Kyoto, Japan, prepares a Japanese ink painting banner at the recent Japan Semester Focus 2000 program sponsored by the International Center.

Bringing the world to Berea—one of the major goals of the College's International Center—became a reality with the beginning of the Spring Term. Japanese arts, culture and history are included in an in-depth program that began in January and continues through May. Some of the highlights concerning the focus on Japan and its impact on the campus community are in Julie Sowell's story that begins on page 8.

Motion picture actors have explored a variety of avenues in their quests to build film careers. Berea's Muse Watson, Cx'71, devised a five-year plan that has resulted in roles in more than 20 major motion pictures. See page 11 and learn why the Louisiana native credits the late Paul Power, '58, former Dramatics Lab director, for his career.

Stuart Moran, the College's newest All-American, points out that friends in his native England are proud of his accomplishments in cross country, but really don't understand how an Englishman can be all american. The cultural puzzle notwithstanding, Moran believes his best running may be yet to come. A profile on this outstanding athlete begins on page 16.

Are you familiar with the Melungeons? Bill Fields, Cx'77, and S.J. Arthur, '72, have become specialists concerning this multi-racial, multi-ethnic people, who first were documented in Appalachia late in the 18th century. Beginning on page 21, Margaret Merrick explains how these alums are helping instill pride in an ancestry that nearly was forgotten.

This issue also contains an article by Elizabeth Watts, '99, who tells how Broomcrafts' quality work has resulted in a continuing contract with one of the nation's largest suppliers of broomcorn. You'll also learn about some new Berea trustees, a Berea coach who now has won 25 coach-of-the year awards and plans for Summer Reunion 2000. The June 9-11 reunion will honor Harvey and Doris Hinkle Musser, two '55 graduates, who'll receive the Distinguished Alumnus Award.

Laird, Blade elected Board approves renovations projects

The College's Board of Trustees has elected two new members and approved two renovation projects for campus buildings.

The new trustees are the Rev. Canon Lucinda Rawlings Laird, rector of St. Andrew's Episcopal Church in Louisville, and Vance Blade, assistant distribution manager for The Kroger Company's Louisville Division. Both will assume six-year terms, Laird beginning in May and Blade in October.

Approval also was given for a $2.6-million renovation for Kettering Women's Residence Hall and a $2.1-million project for the Center on Excellence in Learning Through Service (CELTS) in the Trades and Bruce buildings. Work on Kettering will begin at the conclusion of the Spring Term while renovation activities will begin immediately for the Trades-Bruce project.

The election and renovation approvals resulted at the Board's Feb. 26 meeting.

Rev. Canon Laird served as rector of St. Mark's Church in Teaneck, N.J. and held several other positions in the Diocese of Newark before assuming her present post. She is a member of the national church's Standing Commission on Ecumenical Relations and holds a B.A. from Barnard College and a Master of Divinity degree from the General Theological Seminary. She has been an ordained priest in the Episcopal Church since 1982.

Blade, a native of Eminence, Ky., will serve as an alumni trustee. He is a 1982 graduate of Berea with a degree in business administration and has been employed with the Kroger Company since 1983, where he also has held positions as co-manager of retail food operations, minority affairs coordinator and human resources manager.

The former Berea basketball star served on the Alumni Association's Alumni Council from 1988-1993 and received the Outstanding Young Alumnus Award in 1983. Active in community service, Blade has served on the Commonwealth of Kentucky Martin Luther King Jr. Commission, the board of directors of the Bridgehaven Mental Health Organization, and other organizations.

Kettering, the third structure to be renovated as part of a six-year residence hall rejuvenation program, will have all infrastructure systems upgraded and a new data communications capabilities added. An eight-10 member student crew will work with project contractors for the length of the project. A student crew also was used with the recent Danforth Hall renovation.

The Trades-Bruce project will create space for Berea's new CELTS project. It involves mechanical and electrical upgrades for the Trades Building and a renovation of the structure's second floor where the Students for Appalachia (SFA) offices are currently located. In addition, a connector between Trades and Bruce will be constructed and a new elevator for the buildings will be installed.

The connector will facilitate collaboration between the CELTS project and Berea's Appalachian Center.

Service recognizes 80 mid-year grads

Eighty Berea College seniors participated in the recognition service for mid-year graduates on Dec. 12.

Candidates recognized were expected to complete degree requirements at the end of December, 1999 or January, 2000.

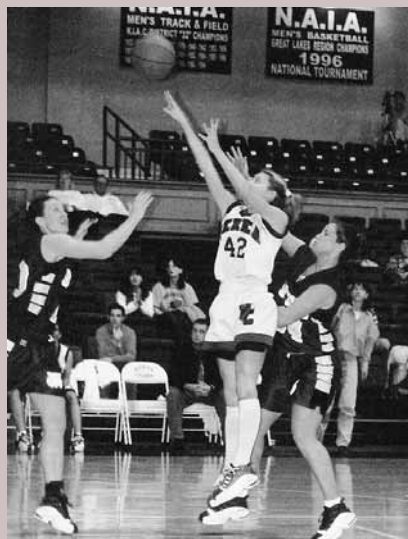

Dr. John Wallhauser, Distinguished Professor of General Studies and Henry Mixer Penniman Professor of Philosophy and Bible, gave the main address at the event.

New phone system allows direct calling

All College telephone numbers have been changed as a result of a new phone system that went into effect on campus Dec. 17.

The College's new main number is 985-3000. Also, the 606 area code changed April 1 to 859, but will not become mandatory until Oct. 1.

With the new telephone system, all departments, staff and students now have direct dial numbers that can be reached without going through a campus operator. Callers can receive information from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. on new phone numbers by dialing the new main number (859/985-3000) and speaking with a campus operator. After 5 p.m., an automated telephone directory can be accessed.

DAR grant honors Ellen Best Evans

A memorial scholarship honoring the late Ellen Best Evans, '30, has been established by the Berea-Laurel Ridges Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution (DAR).

Mrs. Evans, a former Kentucky and Berea regent of the DAR, died last August at age 89.

Awards from the Ellen Evans Scholarship Fund will be designated for student financial aid at Kentucky colleges.

Mary Katherine Fielder Kauffman, '46, is regent of the Berea chapter. Her address is 201 Glades Street, Berea, Ky. 40403.

16 from Berea help in tornado clean-up

Sixteen Berea students and administrators spent two days in Owensboro during January assisting the community in clean-up and relief efforts following a tornado that caused wide-spread damage there Jan 3.

The students were volunteers from the student life Collegium, Bonner Scholars program and Students for Appalachia (SFA.)

Accompanying them were Dennis Jacobs, director of the Work Colleges Consortium based at Berea, and Betty Hibler, director of the Bonner Scholars and Students for Appalachia programs.

The Berea group helped with several community-wide efforts, going door-to-door in the damaged areas offering assistance to residents and distributing relief information, and assisting with yard clean-up, damaged carpet removal, and moving articles to the curb for pick-up. They also helped sort, stack and move donated items of clothing, food and household supplies in collection and distribution centers that had been set up in Owensboro.

Brescia College provided housing for the group during their stay.

Student volunteers were Justin Nickell, of Lexington; Adam Campbell, Vanceburg; Rebekah Easton, Warsaw; Brandon Pyles, Berea. and Owensboro native Niyetta Williams. Others in the group were Kimberly Burchett, Adam Carter, Stafford Easterling, Sarah Hooks, Stella Lawson, Esther Martinez, Jason Prater, Natalie Pride, Sonjala Washington, Michael Wise and Lora Wogan.

1,426 are enrolled for spring semester

Berea has enrolled 1,426 students for the spring semester, according to information from the Office of Records and Registration.

The total, which includes both full- and part-time students, consists of 830 women and 596 men. The freshman class is composed of 419 students while the seniors number 331. The sophomore class has 330 registrants while 293 are classified as juniors.

Part-time enrollment totals 53, with 19 of those from the Berea Community School. Ten Madison Southern students and 10 employees are taking courses and 14 special students are enrolled.

The fall term enrollment for the 1999-2000 academic year was 1,550.

'Earth' celebrated

HEAL (Helping Earth and Learning) and the Sustainability and Environmental Studies (SENS) program were two College sponsors of Earth Day 2000 activities during April.

Events included opportunities for celebration and activity to increase sustainability of the College, the community and the region. Co-sponsors of a road clean-up were Eastern Kentucky University (EKU) and Madison County.

United Way executive named Heard accepts Board position

Marian L. Heard, president and chief executive officer of United Way of Massachusetts Bay and chief executive officer of the United Ways of New England, has accepted a position on the College Board of Trustees.

Her term, which was effective Jan. 1, will run through May, 2006.

Heard has served in various leadership capacities with United Way for 17 years. She was appointed to her current positions in 1992 and previously was president and chief executive officer of United Way of Eastern Fairfield County in Bridgeport, Conn.

She also is on the boards of Fleet Financial Group, Blue Cross and Blue Shield, Liberty Mutual Insurance Company and the New England Aquarium. In addition, she is a member and secretary of entertainer Michael Jackson's Heal the World Foundation and a trustee of Dana Farber Cancer Institute. As a director of the National Mentoring Partnership, she has been a mentor for the past five years and serves as the organization's national spokesperson.

Heard earned an associate's degree from the University of Bridgeport, a bachelor's degree from the University of Massachusetts at Amherst and a master's degree from Springfield College.

Matches sought for S-C-R Fund

The Celo Family Corporation of University City, Mo., has agreed to match contributions up to a total of $15,000 for the Frank Smith-Ethel Capps-John Ramsay Endowment Fund.

The fund, initiated last year, was established for the support of such College recreation extension programs as the Christmas Country Dance School, Country Dancers, Mountain Folk Festival and Danish-American Exchange. Interest from the fund will be used to meet program needs not covered by the College budget.

Contributions should be designated for the Smith-Capps-Ramsay Endowment Fund and mailed before June 30 to the Berea College Alumni Association, CPO 2203, Berea, Ky. 40404.

Berea falls, Ridder wins it all in NAIA

The men's basketball team was defeated in the National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics (NAIA) Division II National Tournament, but a Berea alumnus coached his team to the title.

Berea's cold field-goal shooting enabled Grand View (Iowa) to defeat the Mountaineers 84-71 in the first round of the March 8-14 tournament.

phoning

The Alumni Association's annual phonathon resulted in 917 pledges and $22,425 during eight calling sessions in January. Some 60 students made calls.

However, Steve Ridder, who played at Berea from 1977-81, coached Embury-Riddle University to five victories and a 75-63 win over College of the Ozarks in the championship game of the ninth annual tournament.

Ridder, who's also athletic director at the Daytona Beach, Fla., university, was named Coach of the Year for his team's achievement.

Berea finished its season with an 18-12 record.

Stephenson concert features pianist

American pianist Leon Bates presented two programs at Berea during February—an afternoon “informance” and an evening recital—as part of the 1999-2000 Stephenson Memorial Concert Series.

At the evening recital, Bates performed Gershwin's “Rhapsody in Blue” and Rachmaninoff's “Variations on a Theme of Corelli, Op. 42,” two works for which he is well known. Also on the program were Beethoven's Sonata in B-flat Major, Op. 22 and a three-movement Sonatina by French composer Maurice Ravel.

The focus of the afternoon “informance” was “Music and Media.”

Civil rights lawyer opens history month

Civil Rights lawyer Morris Dees, founder of the Southern Poverty Law Center, initiated Black History Month activities on campus as the featured Carter G. Woodson Memorial Lecturer on Feb. 3.

The February celebration was based on the theme “Together As One: Conquering the New Millennium.”

Spring 2000

Dees has been involved with some of the most historic legal victories in the civil rights movement. He published “Gathering Storm: America's Militia Threat” in 1996 and has written two other books; an autobiography “A Season for Justice;” and “Hate on Trial: The Case Against America's Most Dangerous Neo-Nazi.” He has twice been portrayed in major motion pictures.

A graduate of Alabama Law School, Dees has won numerous awards for his work at the Center. His honors include being named “Trial Lawyer of the Year” by the Trial Lawyers for Public Justice and receiving the National Education Association's Martin Luther King Jr. Memorial Award.

$58,000 grant aids Cincinnati women

Berea has received a $58,000 grant from the Charlotte R. Schmidlapp Fund for the support of Cincinnati area women who attend the College.

The grant, pledged over four-years, will fund a $14,500 cost of education scholarship for a female student of Appalachian background each of those years.

The Schmidlapp Fund was created in 1908 by a gift from Jacob C. Schmidlapp in memory of his daughter, Charlotte, who died in an auto accident at age 19. Grants from the Fund are restricted to helping women establish themselves in life.

Letters requested for memory book

Alumni submissions are requested for a memory book for John Cook, '60, associate to the provost, Student Administration Services, who's retiring in May.

Cook, who joined the College 30 years ago as Alumni Association director, has held several positions at the College, including 22 years he served as Admissions director.

Notes and letters should be mailed to Susan Curtis Vaughn, CPO 2204, Berea College, Berea, Ky. 40404. Alumni also were invited to attend a reception for Cook on May 12 in Baird Lounge, Alumni Building. The book was presented to him at that time. A potluck followed the reception.

Hoffman honored at tech summit

Dr. Megan Hoffman, assistant professor of biology, was the winner of a “Cutting Edge” Award at the Appalachian College Association's Technology Summit held recently in Knoxville.

Hoffman won second place and $400 for her use of computers to enhance writing and learning in biology courses.

Using Berea's local lab network, first-level biology students have round-the-clock access to review questions for exams, peers' questions and responses, and to professors' ideas and study aids. In the Senior Seminar course taught by Hoffman, students use reviewing software and the local network to write and review their manuscripts.

The cash award will be used to buy instructional software. Projects at the summit were judged on their creative integration of technology into the curriculum.

Four other Berea faculty members were nominated for Cutting Edge Awards: Harrie Buswell, environmental science and technology and education; Gary Mahoney, '82, technology and industrial arts; Richard Sears, English and theatre, and Ann Solberg,

More than 25 programs set through May as Center begins cultural immersion experience.

By Julie Sowell, Berea College Public Relations

The abbot of a Japanese Buddhist monastery leads a zen meditation session.

At the library, an exhibit of swords and suits of Japanese warrior armor conjures up images of ancient battles.

And a koto ensemble plays traditional Japanese music.

This might describe a day in the life of a visitor to Japan. But, in fact, all of these events have taken place at Berea this spring as part of the International Center’s Japan Semester Focus 2000.

More than 25 programs scheduled from February through May are presenting many aspects of contemporary and historic Japanese life and culture to the Berea community. Designed to provide as many access points as possible, the program includes visual and performing arts, exhibits, scholarly and popular speakers, crafts, sports and martial arts, ceremonies, cooking, a variety of workshops and demonstrations, and two film series.

More than 25 programs scheduled from February through May are presenting many aspects of contemporary and historic Japanese life and culture to the Berea community.

Martin Holman, International Center director, says his goal is to make the program as broad-based and comprehensive as possible.

“I’m trying to create something as close to an ‘immersion experience’ of another culture as comes to cam-

I can on campus,” Holman says. “There is an international aspect to just about everything.”

The semester’s first event was a visit by Zen master Fukushima Keido, head of the Tofuku Temple in Kyoto and a master calligrapher, who gave a public lecture, a calligraphy demonstration, met with classes and conducted a Zen meditation session.

Several events were clustered around a 10-day period in mid-April to create a community-wide “Festival of Japan.”

While Japan Focus events are scheduled virtually every week during the semester, several were clustered around a 10-day period in mid-April to create a community-wide “Festival of Japan.” Featured were Taiko Drum workshops and a performance by Fubuki Daiko, a Taiko drumming troupe.

Japan is the first country to be featured during the program, which will focus on a different country or region each semester. The focus for Fall 2000 will be Mexico and Central America and the Spring 2001 feature will be Central Eastern Europe.

Beginning this summer, service and study abroad, educational exchanges and faculty development opportunities are being added to the program. A group of faculty will travel to Mexico and Costa Rica in June in preparation for the focus that will begin this fall, and another Increasing international education opportunities both on-campus and world-wide is an important goal of the College's strategic plan, "Being and Becoming," in order to prepare students for citizenship in an increasingly interdependent global community. Holman said the aim of the semester focus program is to help all members of the Berea community develop a greater appreciation and knowledge of the world.

Increasing international education opportunities both on-campus and worldwide is an important goal of the College's strategic plan, "Being and Becoming," in order to prepare students for citizenship in an increasingly interdependent global community.

"I hope the broad range of exposure and engagement with the featured country fosters discussion and reflection about cross-cultural contrasts" he commented, "as well as the things we have in common." □

Language's Semester Abroad initiated international study

Before the creation of the International Center, the department of foreign languages was Berea's de facto center for international education, offering language courses, providing cultural events and sponsoring study abroad programs for both majors and minors.

Semester-Abroad programs in Germany, Austria, France, Mexico, Italy, Greece and Spain for majors in French, German, Spanish and classical languages have been offered since 1982, with up to 60 percent of the program's cost paid by funds from the George I. Alden Trust. It's a great opportunity for language majors and a program that more than 80 percent of them utilize, according to Dr. Margarita Graetzer, department chair.

"It's not required, but we strongly recommend it," she continued. "The Semester Abroad is important not only for mastery of the language, but for the experience itself."

French majors can spend a whole year in France on an internship, teaching English at elementary or high schools.

In 1997, a dual-option program began that expanded semester-long study abroad to non-language majors. Students can take general education courses in English as well as in foreign languages, according to Graetzer, who taught in the first program in Mexico. The department also sponsors short-term courses in Mexico, France and this year, Cuba.

Dr. Margarita Graetzer (left), Foreign Languages chair, and Yoko Uchida, a visiting instructor of Japanese, work with students in the Language Lab.

Japanese instruction, part of a growing interest in East Asian studies at Berea, has been offered for several years. Taught until recently through self-instruction, Japanese is now being taught "live" by a native speaker, supervised by Martin Holman, International Center director and assistant professor of foreign languages.

Berea's affiliation in 1988 with the Kentucky Institute for International Study (KIIS), which resulted largely through the efforts of Spanish professor Dr. Fred de Rossett, '72, has provided additional Study-Abroad opportunities. KIIS, which also has made it possible for Berea faculty to teach abroad, is now administered through the International Center.

It's a shift that reflects Berea's new international landscape, Graetzer said, in which the language department and the International Center provide mutual support.

"The International Center supports our program for language study," she said, "while we deal with the 'language side' of a well-rounded international curriculum."

It started with a truck

Muse Watson devised a five-year plan to act in motion pictures. It worked.

Muse Watson

By Ed Ford, Public Relations Director

Motion picture actor Muse Watson calls it his five-year plan.

In the late 1980s, after nearly 20 years as a regional stage and musical-theater actor, Watson — the former Robert Gravel, Cx'71 — wanted greater success as a performer. But, realistic by nature, he was aware there were very few opportunities to actually make a living in theater. Film was the medium that provided the money.

“So, I got a job driving a movie truck,” Watson explained.

It was the beginning of a well-devised strategy designed to land him a movie role within five years. And, almost to the day, it worked.

Now, 11 years later, Watson has appeared in more than 20 major motion pictures.

His film credits include

and two recent horror films, “I

Know What You Did

Last Summer” and “I Still

Know What You Did Last Summer.”

The plan began in 1988 with Muse, as a driver, handling transportation tasks for such major feature films as “Mississippi Burning,” “Steel Magnolias,” “Forest Gump” and “The Last of the Mohicans.” The work provided the tall, dark

Watson with one of the best internships he could have had as he observed—sometimes through binoculars—the skills of such successful screen actors as Gene Hackman and Willem Dafoe.

After several jobs as a driver, Muse then began purchasing trucks and leasing them to film production companies.

Income from the rental equipment enabled him to begin auditioning full time.

“I’d rent the trucks out to the buddies I used to work with and that would free me up for auditions,” Watson explained. “At one time, I had five pieces of equipment I rented and that brought in enough money for me to be at home and available for phone calls.

“Right after we did ‘Last of the Mohicans,’ for which I was the logistics coordinator, I got a role in ‘Sommersby.’ It was a tiny little role, but it was pivotal. I was the guy (the drifter) who came to town and told everybody who Sommersby (Richard Gere) really was.”

After that, the auditions kept coming and Watson soon moved to Wilmington, N.C. “because there was a studio and a lot of activity there.” That led to parts in television Movies of the Week and the series “Matlock.” Then came an audition for “The Road to Wellville.”

He didn’t get the part, but casting director Judy Bouley liked what she saw. So much, in fact, she made a pitch to Marian Dougherty, casting director for Warner Brothers, for Watson to play the role of horse trainer Hank Corrigan in “Something to Talk About.”

That, Muse acknowledges, was his breakout role. Following the shoot, Dougherty convinced Muse that he needed to move to Los Angeles. He did that in 1995 and now divides his time between the West Coast and his Tennessee farm.

“It’s been a career and an entire life of overcoming fears,” Watson commented. He acknowledges his success has resulted despite a fear of being in front of people, a shyness compounded by dyslexia and depression after the death of his father.

“My dad passed away when I was six and I went to live with my grandfather,” Muse said. “My grandfather raised me and he was more like my dad.”

Muse Watson Keller, his maternal grandfather, also became Watson’s namesake. The 51-year-old actor legally changed his name to Muse “It’s been a career and an entire life of overcoming fears,” . . . Watson acknowledges his success has resulted despite a fear of being in front of people.

Watson Gravel when he began his film career.

When he was 13, a family friend diagnosed and treated Muse for dyslexia. In time, he overcame the reading difficulty and circumstances in which “I knew more than I could communicate.”

It was 1970, however, when some major changes began for Watson.

“I transferred from Louisiana Tech to Berea and it was like a whole new world had opened up for me,” he related. “Because I was transferring, I was required to take a freshman speech course taught by Paul Power (Class of ‘58 and Dramatics Lab director). Paul announced in class that he was looking for some new faces at the theater for Shakespeare’s ‘Taming of the Shrew.’”

Watson waited until the auditions were almost over, then summoned the courage to audition for Power.

“Paul knew I’d never been on the stage before and I’m sure that was some concern to him,” Muse added. “But, he believed in me and gave me a chance. The show went well and it started a career for me. Since then, Paul and (Barbara) Byrd Power have encouraged and supported me and I give them credit for my success in theater.”

Watson, with no theater experience at all, landed the lead role of Petruchio in “Taming of the Shrew.”

“I got one of the best acting lessons of my life during that performance,” he said, “because I was so terrified. I had tights on and was sweating so profusely that the perspiration soaked the tights. And here’s where the great acting lesson came in. I told myself, ‘if you’re good enough, they’ll never notice.’”

Good enough meant being the character of Petruchio, something that Power had drilled into Watson.

“Paul used to say, ‘if you get into your character, then it’s not you. Don’t be an actor portraying an actor playing a role. Portray and relate to someone real.’”

Spring 2000

Power also taught him to search for depth in a character.

“Paul said ‘find out what the guy did before the play. Find out who he is, bring his story to the audience and tell his story. This is only one of his stories — all of us have more than one story.’”

Power, who died in 1997, gave Watson a solid acting foundation, something Muse acknowledges in a simple statement.

“Paul Power gave me my career.”

That early training has enabled

“I transferred from Louisiana Tech to Berea and it was like a whole new world had opened up for me.”

Watson autographed head-and-shoulder photos for a throng of fans at a Saturday afternoon reception at Boone Tavern Hotel. He was the Grand Marshal of the City of Berea Christmas Parade later that day.

Watson to play his roles with passion, whether it's a kindly or transitional character or a cold-blooded killer. John Singleton, who directed "Rosewood," has described Watson as having "fire in his eyes." He told Muse that he's always wanted to do the story of abolitionist John Brown, but never had found someone who could play the role until he had met him.

A young fan (below) was instructed by Watson to look at the camera as he posed with the motion picture actor just prior to the Christmas Parade. Watson has appeared in more than 20 major feature films.

"You could do John Brown," he said.

Watson admits to "an energy inside of me that creates some things" where his roles are concerned. This "fire inside" has resulted in some convincing performances. In fact, he has a cult following where his role of Ben Willis is concerned in "I Know What You Did Last Summer" and "I Still Know What You Did Last Summer."

As the hook-wielding fisherman who's on a dedicated killing spree, Watson is convincingly scary. His performance is one of the reasons "I Know What You Did Last Summer" set a box office record for an October opening when it was released in 1997.

In "Rosewood," Muse played Henry Andrews, a Klansman instrumental in inciting destruction and murder in a black town in Florida. Watson wanted his performance to be so convincing that "people would leave the theater hating my guts."

"A friend of mine asked me to see 'Rosewood' with him at a theater in Santa Monica," Muse smiled. "When I got shot, everybody in the theater stood up and applauded. I kind of sank down in my seat and said to my buddy, 'You know, we may not make it out of here alive.'"

Watson said there are many instances in his acting career where he's had to overcome personal fears. Such as the time he auditioned for the television series "X-files" and a role as a snake-handling preacher from Tennessee. He was told not to audition if he were afraid of snakes. Fear or respect of reptiles notwithstanding, Muse decided to go for the part.

"I'm just going to get into character," he decided. "I'm scared of snakes, but this preacher isn't."

They handed Muse a five-foot rattler, which he instinctively held up as he began preaching.

"I didn't get the role, but I felt SO good about overcoming my fears."

And this helped where another fear was concerned — being without air under water. In a scene from "I Know What You Did Last Summer," Muse was required to remain under water for several takes, receiving air after each cut from a stuntman with an oxygen tank. It also was necessary to tie Muse's feet to the bottom so he wouldn't float to the top.

"I'm sitting there, supposedly dead, and Barry (Ryan Phillippe) dives into the water to find me," Watson explained. "I've got this tiara in my hand and he (Phillippe) makes three pulls at it and then I open my eyes and go 'Whoa,' and it scares him and he takes off."

The scene required several takes and, between each, additional time was necessary to re-set the camera and wait for the water to still. For Muse, the filming seemingly "took a week."

For his efforts, Watson got some special recognition from the stuntmen.

"The guys with the stunt association sent me two of their t-shirts —

'Stunts Unlimited' — which I wear with pride," Muse said. "And, in a letter, they explained 'We don't run into many actors who overcome their fears as well as you do...'"

Watson's ability to bring his characters to life is resulting in plenty of roles. He plays Sheriff Billy Ray Barnwell in the upcoming "Morgan's Ferry" with Billy Zane and Kelly McGillis and is Todd in "All the Rage" with Anna Pacquinn and Gary Sinise. In "Songcatcher," a film he finished in September, he plays a mild-mannered Appalachian who's a fiddler. Although he doesn't actually play the fiddle, Muse so carefully studied the fingering and bow strokes for the instrument that his performance is convincing.

And the ability to convince had its beginning in Berea.

As a student, one of Watson's campus jobs was as an instructor in an adult literacy program. While teaching an African-American man to read and write, he became close friends with the family. In 1971, while performing in the College outdoor drama "Wilderness Road," Muse invited Mrs. Hicks, the widow of his former student, to attend the show.

Watson played the role of Jed Willis, a pro-slavery advocate and member of the Ku Klux Klan. After the show was over, he went out front and found his friend, hands on hips, staring at him.

"I didn't like you," she snapped.

Muse Watson's Berea connection includes two members of the campus community. His oldest sister, Gerry Morris, is the wife of Campus Minister Lee Morris.

The best may be yet to come

*Berea All-American seeks a new goal in the marathon
at NAIA nationals.*

Cross Country All-American Stuart Moran is very matter-of-fact when it comes to assessing his skills.

"By the time I'm 30, I'll be a pretty good runner," he maintains.

Moran, a 23-year-old senior from Brighton, England, became Berea's 24th All-American in November when he finished 27th in the 8,000-meter National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics (NAIA) Cross Country Nationals. His time of 25 minutes, 13 seconds was 27 seconds faster than his best previous 8K time. He also was competing for the fourth straight year in the nationals and entered the race as a two-time honorable mention All-America selection.

But, for the physical education major, the best may be yet to come.

"The most satisfying thing is improving myself," Moran related. "I think my best distances will be in the marathon, maybe the half marathon."

In late May, Stuart will test himself in the NAIA National Marathon, a grueling two-hour-plus, 26.2-mile run that demands the ultimate in strength and endurance. His goal is to finish no worse than sixth, which would qualify him as an All-American in that event.

Moran and teammate Matt Byerley, a junior from Elizabethtown, will leave Berea following commencement for the race at Abbotsford, British Columbia, scheduled May 27. Stuart estimates that a time of 2 hours, 28 minutes might win the marathon, and he figures "if I'm going to train for it, I might as well try to win it."

Berea Coach Mike Johnson believes that to be possible.

"When Stuart is confident that he can accomplish something, he can do it," Johnson commented. "He's a hard worker, a powerful runner with a good kick and someone who has good speed. Many times, distance runners are thin, but Stuart has the form of a middle-distance runner—strong and muscularly put together.”

The 6-foot-3 Moran likes to run at a weight of 160-165 pounds.

“I can tell when I’m in shape as my face kind of sinks in,” he smiled.

And, it’s his work ethic that gets and keeps Stuart in shape.

“During the cross country season, I ran about 80 miles a week,” he said. “For six weeks, I averaged about 80 miles and went up as high as 90, usually taking one day off every two weeks.

“I run twice a day most days. In the morning, I go five miles and in the evening I run anywhere from seven to 12 miles.”

Stuart doesn’t do any weight training and eats no special foods. His routine depends on running, plus a daily regimen of pushups and situps. He eats sensible foods and a lot of them because “when you run 80 miles per week, you pretty much metabolize everything.”

Johnson points out that 45-50 miles per week is the usual training schedule for a distance runner.

“I started running in junior school,” Moran said, “when one of my friends got me to go to the park and join in for cross country. I won the area school’s cross country race when I was about 12 and the school headmaster urged me to join a running club. I was a sprinter in those days, but gradually found my niche was running distance races.”

Stuart also played soccer, but didn’t begin training for distance running until he was about 17. Improvement in distance and time resulted as his training efforts increased. He also became a member of a running club that has produced several Olympians.

“My progress has been quite satisfying,” Moran stated. “I want to keep progressing until I’m 30 or so and I’d like eventually to run for England, but I have a little more progression to make.”

One of the members of Stuart’s English running club is still competing at age 47 and runs a 4:10 mile.

In addition to his running, Moran plans to teach in England and will begin graduate studies next fall at a university in Chichester, which is about a 30-minute drive from Brighton.

Johnson recruited his most recent All-American from the same running club that produced Ian and Paul Leak and Simon Jewell, all of whom ran for Berea in the late 1980s. Alan Mills, a Berea hammer thrower in the mid-1980s, also was from that club. Johnson said the club’s Dave Smith, who also coached the Leaks and Jewell, recommended Moran to him.

Stuart wasn’t accepted at Berea on his first try, but two years later—1996—Johnson called after re-submitting the application and told Stuart he had been accepted. Moran, then a student at an English two-year college, wasn’t certain he wanted to enroll, but Johnson’s insistence prevailed.

“Once he (Johnson) claps on to a recruit, he doesn’t let go,” Moran smiled. “It’s been a good four years.”

Stuart’s friends and family are proud of his accomplishments, but they don’t quite understand about an Englishman being an All-American.

“I tried to explain it to my mom,” Moran commented, “and she said, ‘Well done,’ but I don’t think in England they realize what an All-American is. We don’t have anything like an All-British ranking over there.

“All-American is unique to this country, but I think it’s quite good.”

Actually, Stuart’s mother may view All-America in a different context. She told her son that after four years in the U.S., he had “picked up a bit of an accent.” —Ed Ford □

Berea College Cross Country Coach Mike Johnson, ’73, has received his 25th Coach of the Year Award.

Johnson received his most recent coaching honor from the Kentucky Intercollegiate Athletic Conference (KIAC) as his 1999 Berea Men’s Cross Country team won the conference title with a 57-17 record.

All but two of Johnson’s Coach of the Year honors are in men’s track and cross country and women’s cross country. He won coaching honors twice for swimming and received his first coaching recognition in 1981.

Since joining Berea in 1979, Johnson also has produced 22 All-Americans in track and cross country.

More than 80 courses – ranging from “Biotechnology in Everyday Life” to “Who’s Really from Mars? Theories of Communication and Gender” – were listed in January’s Short-Term Catalog.

In addition, there were a number of independent projects, courses and internships conducted on and off campus, plus student exchanges with other colleges that follow a 4-1-4 academic schedule. Independent topics covered such subjects as “Pollution in the Bagmati River,” “Greek Monetary Policy,” “Teaching & Learning: Denmark,” and “Church and Social Change.”

al time for learning

Since 1971, Berea’s Short Term has provided students with the opportunity to do intensive study in only one course or topic of special interest. It’s a time “for unique educational and experiential opportunities for all members of the Berea (College) community,” according to information in the term’s catalog preface. It also allows for professional growth of faculty and staff through planning and teaching new courses.

All students must complete one Short Term for each full year of enrollment. In addition, only one-half of a student’s required Short Term courses may be completed in his or her major.

Some of the activity that took place during Short Term 2000, Jan. 3-28, is recorded on these pages. □

2. Donald Mulwee (left), sophomore from Seneca, S.C., and Amanda Roberts, junior from Roanoke, Va., review brain components with Dr. Megan Hoffman, in the class, “This is Your Brain.”
3. Rob Peterson, senior from Brooklyn, N.Y., conducts a gamma ray experiment for a class on natural background radiation.
4. Jennifer Leak (left) and Lonelle Yoder, Collegium members, perform a skit at one of the Renaissance Madrigal Dinners.
5. Freshman Stephanie Cole practices a step in a class on learning to choreograph for performances.

7. The College Dance Team shows the correct form for participants in the dance performance class.

Fain is referring to dyeing broomcorn, a process the College’s Broomcraft department has been doing for 70 years. Up until three years ago, the College dyed the broomcorn for its own industry-produced brooms. However, in 1997, one of the world’s largest suppliers of broomcorn, The Thomas Monahan Company of Arcola, Ill., sought a reputable place to have its broomcorn dyed, and a contract with Berea resulted.

The relationship began when Emma Reed, retired supervisor of Broomcraft, was on an annual trip to the Broomcorn Festival in Arcola, which is recognized as the broomcorn capital of the world. Reed was asked by Tim Monahan, president of the company, if Broomcraft would be willing to take on the effort of re-dyeing broomcorn that previously was dyed elsewhere

Broomcraft Supervisor Lonnie Reed (right) and Jacob Wandler, a freshman from Elkton, roll broomcorn into another area for re-dyeing.

A reputation that’s valued

The request was relayed to Fain who accepted the task, which has proven to build a strong relationship between not only Thomas Monahan and the College, but also other broommakers as well.

“We started out re-dyeing corn that, initially, had been dyed elsewhere,” Fain said, “but the result just wasn’t the high-quality color that Monahan wanted. He thought we did a good job, so he continued to send us corn every summer.”

And the activity has grown every year.

The College now dyes more broomcorn for outside sources than for its own purposes. During July and August, Broomcraft dyes approximately 12,000 pounds of broomcorn for other vendors while, on the average, only dyeing between 600 and 700 pounds monthly for its own industry.

“We need what Berea has,” Monahan commented, “so we’ve moved most of our business to the College. We’re getting good service and good quality and the College is getting better colors for us.”

The dyeing services for Monahan and other broom-making operations have resulted in an increase in revenue and business for Broomcraft, Fain acknowledged, pointing out that the diversification is unique to College Crafts.

Broomcorn is dyed entirely by students and one master craftsman, Lonnie Reed, whose family has been a major part of Berea’s broomcraft tradition for nearly 60 years.

During the process of dyeing, the broomcorn is submerged 30 pounds at a time into each vat of color. A rack, weighted down by a concrete block, then is placed on the corn and holds it in place as the dye is absorbed. Afterward, the broomcorn is rinsed for 30 minutes and then dries overnight in a kiln at 240 degrees. Blue and brown are the most common colors used in the dyeing process. □

The Melungeon Heritage

Alums key players in move to instill pride in ancestry nearly forgotten.

By Margaret Merrick

While at Berea, Bill Fields learned three things that made him want to know more about his genealogy and become accepting of it.

“First, look for the truth.”

“Then, have a burning pride about being Appalachian.”

“And third, celebrate the infinite diversity of people and absolution of oneself from everybody else.”

S. J. Arthur offers an addition:

“We have taken our Berea College education and gone forward with it.”

S.J. Arthur and Bill Fields check out data used in the Melungeon workshop held on campus

Fields, Cx '77, and Arthur, '72, board members of the Melungeon (ma-lun-jun) Heritage Association, use these reasons to explain how the College instilled pride about their Appalachian heritage. This past summer, the two alums further enriched that heritage as they were instrumental in organizing a Melungeon genealogy workshop sponsored by the College's Appalachian Center.

The June 25-26 workshop — attended by more than 200 individuals from 20 states — was organized for people to become better acquainted about their Melungeon heritage. The Melungeons are a multi-racial and multi-ethnic people who first were American, African American and Spanish, just to name a few.

The term “Melungeon” is most commonly applied to individuals living in eastern Kentucky, southwestern and southern Virginia, and eastern Tennessee.

“We look at all of the different ancestors as important,” Fields said

Machado-Joseph Disease and Thalassemia Major were the illnesses discussed.

“The project's purpose was to specifically educate people of Melungeon descent, so that they can inform their physicians,” Arthur explained. “But it is entirely up to their physicians to properly diagnose them.”

At one time Melungeons were discriminated against both legally and socially, Arthur pointed out, so they tended to settle in isolated communities. They mostly kept to themselves or moved so their heritage was not suspect. Oral history among Melungeon families was not often shared with their succeeding families.

During one of their discussions online, they learned both had attended Berea with an emphasis in sociology. However, they had missed each other by about three years. Fields is the director of Samaritan Place, one of eight nationwide emergency shelters functioning approximately a year prior to its charter.

“A group of 10 people were the core of the group and those 10 serve as part of the 16-member board,” he explained. “The MHA currently has a mailing list of 1,000 people.”

Oral history among Melungeon families was not often shared with their succeeding families. Today, more people of this descent are tending to embrace their cultural diversity and wanting to know more about their personal history.

Craft items from the 1900s resurface

MILLENNIUM COLLECTION

What do you do with a bolt of student-woven, diamond-patterned all-wool material that's been stored for at least 50 years?

The students and staff at College Crafts had an answer. Use the fabric to upholster an Empire Stool that would be produced from a design that dates back to the 1620s. That stool and seven other items from Woodcraft, Weaving and Broomcraft now are a part of Crafts' Millennium Collection, pieces the industry initially produced in the first half of the 1900s.

The products included in Crafts' Millennium Collection include (clockwise, from left) the Table Runner, Tic-Tac-Toe game, the Witch Baby, Artcraft and Witchcraft Brooms, Couch Throw, Empire Stool, and the Berea Basket.

Crafts introduced the collection in its new catalog issued in October. In addition to the stool (priced at $100), other items are a round-shaped Tic Tac Toe game ($18), a mahogany-finished wastebasket ($75), a table runner in a Colonial Whig Rose pattern ($75), an all-cotton/machine washable couch throw ($100), and three brooms—the Witchcraft ($22.50), Artcraft ($50) and Witchbaby ($20) hearth varieties.

All eight products are produced in limited quantities and marked with the special designation "The Millennium Collection." They'll be sold through June or until the inventory is depleted.

For more information, contact College Crafts at 1-800-347-3892, see the 2000 Crafts Catalog, or check the Crafts website at www.bereacollege-crafts.com. □

It's about getting priorities in order

Mission work, according to Harvey and Doris Hinkle Musser, is a great way to get priorities in order.

After more than 25 years as missionaries in Brazil and Haiti, the Mussers have experienced a variety of obstacles and hardships as they've attempted to make life better for those who are less fortunate.

As Presbyterian Church missionaries, the couple has managed boarding schools, handled maintenance and construction projects, dug wells, cared for the ill and undernourished and, in the process, have "said a few words on behalf of the Lord."

It's been a rewarding experience for the 1955 graduates, who have participated in the mission field without hesitation. They view it "as something the Lord wants us to do."

The Mussers will be honored at Summer Reunion 2000 as recipients of the Distinguished Alumnus Award. They'll receive their award at the Saturday evening Alumni Banquet, one of the major activities during the June 9-11 weekend.

Another honoree is Sidney Saylor Farr, '80, author and retired editor of Appalachian Heritage magazine, who'll receive the Award of Special Merit at Saturday's Alumni Coffee.

Farr, assistant to the Special Collections Librarian, retired from the College in December. She joined the College in 1983 and has authored six books, including "What Tom Sawyer Learned from Dying."

Reunion activities begin on the ninth with a Friday evening picnic followed by class luncheons and the Alumni Banquet on Saturday. Seating for the banquet is limited and on a first-come, first-served basis.

Reunions are scheduled for the classes of 1935, '40, '45, '50, '55, '60, '65, '70, '75, Knapp Hall classes, Foundation classes through 1955 and Academy classes from 1940-55. ☐
